What is a Water Polisher and Why do I need one?

Milling rice is easy. You pre-clean the paddy to remove the straw and grass, then you send it through the husker to remove the abrasive husk and then through a stone whitener to remove the bran. You pass your milled rice through a length separator to remove the brokens, run it through a color sorter to get rid of the stained rice, and finally into your well researched bagging solution for your ideal clients.

If that is how you are currently running your rice mill or at least how you are thinking about putting together your first rice mill, you've got a good line of machines, but you're missing a very important step. A water polisher can take your product from an average looking milled kernel to a high quality beautifully sheened kernel which will bring higher value to your end client. A stone whitener uses a "scratching" motion to wear the bran off of your brown rice. That scratching gets most of the bran off, but also leaves scuff marks and scratches in your kernel, which houses additional bran that the stone whitener couldn't fully remove. A water polisher smoothes out your kernel surface and takes that additional bran off.

Cancun Rice Conference

ZaccariaUSA had a great time at the US Rice Producers Rice Market and Technology Conference in Cancun this month. Every year it gets better with more informative speakers, new and excited vendors, and great networking opportunities for everyone.

Father's Day – Saturday, June 21

Adam Sandler is quoted as saying: “I mean, I look at my dad. He was twenty when he started having a family, and he was always the coolest dad. He did everything for his kids, and he never made us feel like he was pressured. I know that it must be a great feeling to be a guy like that.
